CobbleSoft Promotes Knowledge Sharing with Free Oracle Software

PHELPS, N.Y., January 22, 2003 — CobbleSoft International Ltd. today announced the release of SchemaSurf™, a Web-based utility for Oracle developers and database administrators that is designed for browsing database schemas. Furthering CobbleSoft's mission to promote knowledge sharing and excellence in business applications development, SchemaSurf is being offered entirely free-of-charge to the Oracle community.

Developing applications in today's rapidly changing business environment requires fast, easy, and secure access to underlying schemas. SchemaSurf allows users to browse database object definitions, storage statistics, retrieve data to both screen and spreadsheet, and extract stored and compiled program units.

SchemaSurf provides secure, read-only access to Oracle database schemas and data via a standard Web browser. Unlike most other developer tools that require client/server access, SchemaSurf allows users to access their databases from anywhere with company Intranet access. Combined with individual security, this makes it an ideal choice for telecommuters, support personnel and developers that often work from home.

SchemaSurf is the second product to be released by CobbleSoft. The company's flagship product, COIGN™, was launched at the Oracle Applications Users Group conference in October. COIGN rapidly enables enterprise-wide business processes, including Help Desk, Defect Tracking, Sales Lead management, Project Tracking and HR processes. Developed exclusively for the Oracle Web platform, COIGN achieves a significantly earlier ROI than other products due to its global licensing format and by maximizing the potential of existing technology.

About CobbleSoft

CobbleSoft, a privately held company, focuses exclusively on supporting enterprises that use Oracle Corporation's database servers and technologies to run their business.
